

UDW scores two Abe Bailey Fellows

UDW scored a unique double when two students were granted the prestigious Abe Bailey Travel Bursary for 1998, an award which is usually made to one student of every university. The two students, Emmanuel Mqquashu (25) an English Honours student and Sharlene Khan (21), 4th year Fine Art student were so impressive that both were chosen to represent UDW.

The bursary, an all expenses paid, four-week tour of England and Scotland, aims to give outstanding young South African students a greater understanding and co-operation among those with various language and cultural backgrounds, foster enterprise, commitment and effective participation in a common future and promote South African unity.

Both Sharlene's and Emmanuel's dedication to community work has played a significant role in their selection. Sharlene, working as part of the Fine Art Department, has just completed a Peace and Reconciliation exhibition in Ladysmith. Emmanuel, who worked at the Academic Support Programme when he began studying, is currently a Grad assistant.

These two dynamic students have much to look forward to, especially the exchange of ideas and experiences with their British counterparts and "snow".
